Zeiss-Ikon has been making parts for fuses and torpedo heads since 1949. About 26,000 fuse parts are produced monthly, of the same type year after year. They consist of a small cylinder about 3 cm in diameter and 2.5 cm high, having a mechanism that travels over a small propeller. The parts for torpedo heads change from time to time. They are taken away in trucks immediately upon completion. They probably are parts for the steering mechanism. About 60 percent of the output goes to the Soviet Union.
